About IAS

Established in 1978, the International Atherosclerosis Society is a global network of physicians and scientists who collaborate to develop mission-centered programming that spans geographical and generational boundaries.

While IAS counts many of the world's leading atherosclerotic cardiovascular disease experts among its membership, the society's community also includes global authorities and physicians from related disciplines as well as allied health professionals, fellows, students and partners within the policy and patient advocacy communities.

The society represents more than 40,000 health care providers and stakeholders in more than 94 countries. More than 96 professional societies maintain an active membership in IAS, which represents them via the World Heart Federation. IAS is organized as a 501(c)(3) educational public charity with headquarters in Washington, D.C.

About AterosChile

Founded as non-profit organization in 2019, the Chilean Atherosclerosis Working Group Corporation's misión is to advance the prevention and treatment of atherosclerotic cardiovascular disease and related metabolic disorders in Chile. Under the AterosChile brand, the organization brings together clinicians, researchers, and health professionals who are committed to improving lipid management and cardiovascular and metabolic disease prevention across the country.

AterosChile promotes scientific education, multidisciplinary collaboration, research initiatives, and public awareness strategies aimed at reducing the burden of cardiometabolic disease. The organization works closely with national and international societies to strengthen clinical practice, foster academic development, and support evidence-based policies.

As the local host organization of ISA 2027 Santiago, AterosChile is proud to collaborate with the International Atherosclerosis Society to deliver the first IAS Triennial Congress ever held in Latin America, highlighting the region's growing leadership in cardiovascular and metabolic science.

Triennial Congress: The International Symposium on Atherosclerosis

Starting in 1966, even ahead of the establishment of IAS, founding members of an International Program Committee gathered to promote at an international level the advancement of science and teaching related to the field of atherosclerosis. The earliest meetings were in Athens, Greece (1966); Chicago, USA (1969); Berlin, Germany (1973); and Tokyo, Japan (1976).

The triennial congress, called the International Symposium on Atherosclerosis (ISA), continues to bring together thousands of physicians and stakeholders from around the world every three years. The 21st edition of ISA is planned for 20-22 October 2027 in Santiago, Chile – the first congress to be held in South America.

Under the theme “Cardiometabolic Health Unlocked: From Genetics to Global Impact,” congress leadership anticipate at least 800 attendees from around the world, with specific emphasis on attracting physicians and allied health care professionals, researchers, students and fellows, policymakers, patients and advocates from Latin America. ISA 2027 has been endorsed by the Chile National Tourism Board, SERNATUR.
